EXPERIENCE

Brandy J. Gray, partner in the firm's Baltimore office, is a highly accomplished advisor and trial attorney who represents employers, insurers, and third-party administrators in complex workers' compensation matters throughout Maryland. She guides clients through every stage of a workers' compensation claim – from early legal analysis and strategic planning to litigation and resolution – regularly handling disputes involving temporary and permanent disability benefits, evaluating potentially fraudulent claims, and negotiating settlements when appropriate.

Before entering private practice, Brandy spent 16 years as an assistant attorney general, counseling and litigating on behalf of state agencies such as the Maryland Department of Health, the Maryland Insurance Administration, and the Maryland Uninsured Employers' Fund. In those roles, she handled cases in both state and federal courts across a wide spectrum of issues, including employment and civil rights disputes, personal injury and wrongful death claims, and insurance matters. Her combination of regulatory and trial experience positions Brandy to defend insurance carriers facing administrative investigations, including market conduct examinations and targeted examinations.

With deep public-sector experience, Brandy has a rare, practical understanding of how government agencies operate – how decisions are made, how investigations unfold, and how enforcement actions develop. With this insight, she can anticipate emerging issues, shape highly effective defense strategies, and help clients to minimize risk before problems escalate. Brandy is known for her clear, practical guidance on complex statutes and regulations, as well as her strong litigation skills and constructive relationships with courts, agencies, and opposing counsel.
