EXPERIENCE

Jennifer L. Rediehs concentrates her practice on defending manufacturers, distributors, and retailers in product liability litigation, including matters involving fire and explosions, personal injuries, product labeling and warnings, and other issues arising with the use of products. Jennifer serves as national coordinating counsel for multiple product distributors. Jennifer defends product manufacturers and distributors in state and national class actions involving claims of consumer fraud, breach of warranty, and product liability. She also defends property owners and operators against premises liability claims. Jennifer handles construction and professional liability matters, and has successfully defended general contractors, subcontractors, architects, and other design professionals in litigations involving personal injury, property damage, and construction defects.

EXPERIENCE HIGHLIGHTS

Retail and Hospitality

Jennifer has defended retailers and fitness organizations against various premises issues, achieving summary judgment multiple times. Her successes include several summary judgment grants and successfully defending a judgment on appeal to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

Product Liability

Jennifer represents a wide variety of clients including manufacturers, distributors, and retailers in product liability matters. She serves as national counsel for multiple consumer products distributors.

General Liability

Jennifer represents a wide variety of clients including property owners and operators, architects, engineers and other professionals in premise liability matters. In addition, Jennifer represents insurance companies and corporations in the defense of auto-accident cases, including catastrophic loss and trucking matters. She also handles litigation involving personal injury and property damage in construction matters. Jennifer prides herself on the efficient defense of her clients and works to achieve the easy resolution of matters in a cost effective manner.
