EXPERIENCE

Lawrence P. Gallina counsels and defends clients in civil litigation and regulatory matters, with experience spanning construction and commercial disputes, insurance defense, and environmental and land use issues involving complex property interests and development projects. He pairs litigation and negotiation experience with a strong command of contracts, title, and regulatory requirements, allowing him to craft practical strategies that limit risk and keep clients' business goals in focus. Lawrence has represented clients in court hearings, depositions, mediations, and arbitrations, and has negotiated favorable resolutions with government agencies, insurers, and opposing parties.

Lawrence previously spent 13 years with the Central Intelligence Agency, serving as a targeting analyst, branch chief, and contracting officer. He led a multidisciplinary team of analysts, directed complex investigations involving multiple agencies, managed multimillion-dollar government contracts, and prepared intelligence products and briefings for senior policymakers, military leaders, and law enforcement agencies, including work read by two U.S. Presidents. That background sharpened the analytical rigor and sound judgment under pressure that Lawrence brings to every client matter.
